Learning while working for society

As many as 30 college students from the city are working towards creating socio-political awareness in the society. These youngsters are working under the programme - Country Bution. The programme focuses on imparting training on various segments which includes sessions on public speaking, understanding the functioning of various government bodies such as the Vadodara Municipal Corporation and the collectorate, discussions and debate on various current topics, street plays and mock parliament sessions. Students will also get hands on experience. The 29 days programme is hosted by Gujarat Chhatra Sansad in association with M S University's (MSU) Institute of Leadership and Governance and Raoda Boat. "This is the first time that I am a part of an internship programme. It is helping me understanding the social and political scenario of our country along with personality development," said an intern Yash Mubani who is pursuing commerce at MSU.

Youngsters to develop HAS application

Pratik Goris, a final year engineering student of M S University has developed a home automation system (HAS). It is the residential extension of building automation and involves the control and automation of lighting, heating, ventilation, air conditioning, appliances, and security. Goris along with Kashyap Dudhatra and Pavan Dabhania have developed a system with separate modules that will make the product affordable. "It is possible to run two electronic instruments with one module. The number of modules can be increased as per the requirement," said Goris, adding that the system can be controlled by a software developed by them via touch-screen remote, mobile and desktop. The trio is in the process of creating an application that will simplify the use of the system.
